Big-spending Chinese tourists are driving Australia's tourism boom

China has become Australia's most important tourism market, with insiders believing it will remain No. 1 for decades to come. Brian Cassey

Chinese tourists' love affair with Australia shows no sign of abating, but more importantly for tourism operators, they are starting to open their wallets more.

The latest figures released from Tourism Research Australia showed another thumping 13 per cent increase in Chinese visitors to a record 1.3 million in the 12 months to June 30, as the rapidly expanding Chinese middle class follow their dream of visiting Australia's "big skies".

However, the tourism industry was most buoyed by the 15 per cent increase in spending by Chinese tourists in the past year to a record $11.3 billion, which accounts for more than one-quarter of total international tourist spending in Australia.
